Plumes extatiques

Voile de plumes virevoltantes dans un aquarium placé sur l'axe qui relie l'Arche de la Défense à l'Arc de triomphe, Awakening est une invitation à la contemplation et à la poésie. Diplômée des Beaux-Arts de Düsseldorf et représentée par la galerie Papillon (Paris), son auteur, Luka Fineisen (née en 1974) aime à défier les lois de la gravité jouant avec les matières qu'elle modèle à l'envi. Plus loin, une arche cubique façonnée de sphères dorées par Cyril Lancelin (1975) s'amuse à jouer les triplés avec les arcs voisins, quand une maison couchée, signée Jean-François Fourtou (1964) déifie, nonchalante, les gratte-ciels. Audacieuses, provocantes, utopiques, voici les 14 sculptures (dont 70 % ont été réalisées spécialement pour l'événement) qui ponctuent le parcours à ciel ouvert, de l'Esplanade de la Défense (8 sculptures) à la Seine Musicale (6 sculptures et une projection), de la 4<sup>e</sup> édition des « Extatiques » curatée par Fabrice Bousteau (rédacteur en chef de Beaux-Arts magazine et directeur de la rédaction du Quotidien de l'Art). Sous le signe de l'extase et dans une excentricité jouisseuse, le commissaire de l'exposition a proposé, outre les artistes renommés Tony Cragg (1949), Noël Dolla (1945), Jean-Bernard Métais (1954) ou Daniel Arsham (1980), à des chefs, danseurs ou designers de s'emparer également de la question. En partenariat avec JCDecaux, cette saison propose aussi « une exposition dans l'exposition » contextualisant les œuvres in situ dans un ancrage historique et une vision moderne où la notion d'extase revêt de multiples sens, amoureux, religieux ou encore dionysiaques...

"The Artist", Susan Michals, in The Wallstreet journal, 11-13 octobre 2013, p.1-10-11

The cover of Off Duty magazine features a large photograph of artist Susan Michals. She is standing in front of a white wall, wearing a blue long-sleeved top and dark pants. She is holding a long, thin, translucent blue object that appears to be made of liquid or a very malleable material, which she is stretching and bending. To her left, a portion of a white bust sculpture is visible. The title 'OFF DUTY' is prominently displayed in large blue letters at the top center. Below it, there is a small illustration of four colorful chairs (red, green, yellow, blue) arranged in a circle. A horizontal menu bar below the title includes links for Style, Travel, Food, Drink, Design, Gear, Property, Culture, and Sports. The date 'Friday - Sunday, October 11 - 13, 2013' is printed above the menu. The URL 'WSJ.com/style' is at the bottom right. The main headline on the right side of the cover reads 'THE NEW ART'. A descriptive text block to the right of the headline discusses six European artists and their work, mentioning Tim Fleming, director of Art Los Angeles Contemporary. At the bottom, there are four smaller images with captions: 'GO FOR BUST Grab a Gaultier' showing a black dress with gold embroidery; 'TABLE TALK Filling In the Blanks' showing two people at a table; 'DEIA TRIP Exploring hidden Mallorca' showing a scenic view of a hillside town; and 'GET FRAMED Hit London's art fairs' showing a man standing next to a large, abstract golden sculpture.

THE NEW ART

A 19th-century gentleman trapped in the 21st century. A woman who seems to bend the laws of physics. As the art world springs back to life after the summer, we look at six European artists who make up a small but impressive club of creators to watch. "The work of these artists displays suspended moments, deconstructed forms evolving, with results not quite there or defined yet," says Tim Fleming, director of Art Los Angeles Contemporary. "It is quintessential contemporary story-telling." W10

CULTURE

ARTIST: NATALIA IVANOVA ▲

MEDIUM: Mixed media performance

WHY HER: Ms. Ivanova's art is based on found objects. Recently, for example, her studio was full of real-hair wigs, pressed plants and hand-made napkins. The French-born, Berlin-based artist likes to explore what happens to objects, habits and people when they enter the world at large. "I like anything from dance to taxidermy," Ms. Ivanova said via email. "I like to look at the products of these industries and speculate what they mean. I especially enjoy the space between what their makers intended, and what the creators end up talking about once they've gone into circulation." Her work "speaks in the interaction between painting, sculpture, and performance, propelled by a strong conceptual program," says Arnett Genge, assistant curator of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

UPCOMING SHOWS: Price London, with Laura Berluti gallery; solo show at Mission, Llandudno, Wales Oct. 26-Jan. 5.

ARTIST: NATALIA IVANOVA ▼

MEDIUM: Painting

WHY HER: Ms. Ivanova doesn't do small. Her paintings, suffused with bursts of color, strong, dutiful animals and sensuous, heroic women, run to 5 meters. For the Russian who was raised in St. Petersburg and is about to move from Geneva to Berlin, a large canvas not only presents unlimited possibility, it also requires courage. "It's like taking out loud," she muses. "It's always an event." Ms. Ivanova has shown throughout most of Central Europe, and her work can be found in the collections of Thomas Oelrich and Princess Gloria von Thurn und Taxis. The result is scope and scale; the paintings perpetuate a visual salaféfrage, conundrum, akin to a Grimm's fable; beneath the true story—strength, independence and pure female sex—which only becomes apparent after multiple viewings and consideration.

UPCOMING SHOWS: Now in the near future but Ms. Ivanova is focusing on two new series: portraits of boys from the St. Petersburg Navy School, in which she aims to capture a last glimpse of childhood, before the boy becomes—starkly, the second will take on famous fables (think Sleeping Beauty) in a variety of media.

PRICE, DOLL

ARTIST: NINA BEIER ▲

MEDIUM: Mixed media performance

WHY HER: Much of Nina Beier's art is based on found objects. Recently, for example, her studio was full of real-hair wigs, pressed plants and hand-made napkins. The French-born, Berlin-based artist likes to explore what happens to objects, habits and people when they enter the world at large. "I like anything from dance to taxidermy," Ms. Ivanova said via email. "I like to look at the products of these industries and speculate what they mean. I especially enjoy the space between what their makers intended, and what the creators end up talking about once they've gone into circulation." Her work "speaks in the interaction between painting, sculpture, and performance, propelled by a strong conceptual program," says Arnett Genge, assistant curator of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

UPCOMING SHOWS: Price London, with Laura Berluti gallery; solo show at Mission, Llandudno, Wales Oct. 26-Jan. 5.

DREAMS CHUNKY 2: 2012

ARTIST: JACK LAVENDER ▲

MEDIUM: Multi-disciplinary art; primarily sculpture

WHY HIM: Jack Lavender works with a motley assortment of materials and media, from dried fruit to ambient music and crisps packets. Much like his materials, his influences run the gamut—from David Almond through to Vangelis. In his recent exhibition at The Approach in London, entitled "Dreams Chunky," he used myriad found objects to create a neo-primitive mishmash of the detritus of our generation. To Mr. Lavender, this aggregated Potum of found objects allows him to create a reflection of, or perhaps a meditation on, a world that has consumed so much and, at times, given back so little.

UPCOMING SHOWS: Mr. Lavender will show at Price with The Approach gallery.

ARTIST: LUKE FINEISEN ▼

MEDIUM: Sculpture

WHY HER: The German-born artist infuses her art with a childlike lyricism. Her gravity-defying works are varied in their materials: bubbles made of plastic that seem to float across a cement floor, or buildings that seem to be made of molten bronze, slowly separating and melting before our eyes, like taffy being ripped apart. Her works challenge what we know to be true. "As an artist, I can fill the Pacific Ocean with honey or get rid of gravity altogether," says the Berlin-based Ms. Fineisen, whose work can be found in the Kunstmuseum Stuttgart and the Schnütgen Museum in Cologne. "I have the freedom to find the substantials, while simultaneously canceling out the rest; it is a way to deal with the indefinable gray zones, and the incomprehensible surrounding us."

UPCOMING SHOWS: Ms. Fineisen will show at Arko Art Center, Seoul, in November, and with Claudine Papillon Gallerie at Art Los Angeles Contemporary in January.
